[Turing to Social Dipolar Catastrophe] (personal release)

Turing's imitation game was the middle finger an intelligent & sensitive outsider addresses to a hyper-normalized *castrating society* in which the only way to survive is to adapt to its collective *imitation stupidity*.

The paradox is that AI is now democratized as a weapon of doxa which "do for doing", repeating its anthropomorphic metaphors over and over again without understanding, or much worse: believing it understands, led by the tip of the nose by the powerful pedagogy of Computer Masters

For me, it is the impulse sign of a new political catastrophe already well established: a "dipolar totalitarianism" represented by a technopopulism associated with its opposite, surveillance and mass techno-psychological control by the hyper-dominants, but also by the dominated themselves. Because this is the ultimate ruse of techno-capitalism: to "democratize" the very tools that serve for domination, thus *inhibiting all critical power*.

Meanwhile, the well-paid cognitivist scientific bourgeoisie continues its little merry-go-round, believing that it is defending "symbolic truth" from the top of its white tower against the popular heretical rise of a "post-truth", without even realizing that it is a key element of cognitive capitalism which produces this populism.

It is also a cry of despair that must be heard: instrumental reason and the mechanization of bodies, and today of minds, are coming to an end. The real world, that of the living, can no longer bear this unacknowledged morbid impulse.

We need a new comprehensive rationality to regulate and care for this terminally ill world, which, as if suffering from a techno-social cancer, is dying from wanting to live too much.

Fin.
