[Forgetting Evidence]

We, human beings and becoming, are objectively so similar that we strive permanently to express our differences, starting with our linguistic exchanges which are made possible only thanks to this community implicit, thereby forgetting the evidence.

There is not distinction possible (the most elementary analytical form of knowledge production), formally/spacially, without the implicit of a common background, which disappear in the process of transduction (trans-formation of the real process into a seizable cognitive form).

This leads, culturally and historically, techno-scientifically and generation after generation, to a progressive forgetting, to an amnesia, of two foundations of our real lived cognitive experience:

gestures, including our internal mental gestures, being also sensorimotor beings enacted naturally, and therefore a forgetting of life itself, which we embody however.
